I didn't read the Anselm part, my interest was in Nicholas of Cusa and generally in Karl Jaspers. The man from Cusa is hard to even hear about and Jaspers does his usual very fine work covering a surprising philosopher/teacher largely forgotten in the west and, very early on, largely influenced by the East.

Well, Nicholas of Cusa, the 15th Century philosopher and theologian, looks at how faith and reason could work together rather than separately, according to what Karl Jaspers says in his book Anselm and Nicholas of Cusa (Edited by Hannah Arendt, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich:NY. 1966). Nicholas of Cusa implies that faith could be a problem for the philosopher when he says, "Faith produces conflict in the mind."
