Saya S. Shiraishi, the Japanese anthropologist, in his book Young Heroes: The Indonesian Family in Politics argued that the reason we as Indonesians are deeply communal and family centric is not plainly due to a historical or traditional culture reasoning but it is also a conscious political endeavor concretized and structuralized by the late President Soeharto during his 32 years of authoritarian reign.

The genocidal violence of 1965–1966 was an anti-republican counter-revolution. It returned Indonesian citizenship to a form of indirect rule. Today's decentralisation adheres to the same logic, fed by a deep distrust of the central state. But dissatisfaction is growing with the corrupt patronage politics it entails.
